171	We ceased all activities because insurance costs were exorbitant. You ought to know that this issue has been ongoing for 30 years but politicians just simply chose to ignore it. At one stage we put up a notice that all participants and al people attending were NOT insured and got them to sign a book to assent to this, but we were advised by Cork Corporation that this was illegal and we would need to have a million euros worth of insurance before we could use public areas for activities. A slight change in the law would invalidate the need for public liability insurance and put the onus on individuals to have their own personal insurance. Otherwise, the whole thing will destroy the community movement entirelyStudy the inssurance industry Ireland are being made to pay for losses incurred in other countries.	7/17/2019 8:21 PM

537	We used to be able to have Children's parties in our centre but the insurance requirements and questions and costs make it so difficult we had to stop. That loses us money and also reputation. Also used to do an annual family fun and sports day that we gave up on. Partly insurance and partly lack of volunteers who were worried about insurance.	6/27/2019 8:02 AM

557	I am replying for the resident-owned management company responsible for Cloughjordan Ecovillage, which is being developed by Sustainable Projects Ireland, an educational charity. Three years ago our PL premium was €1000, little changed for several years. Two years ago it leapt up to €8000 at short notice. Our broker could find nothing cheaper so we had to pay up. The next year we found another insurer ourselves who is charging us about €2000 - but that's still double what we were paying. And how long before this too jumps up? We have no option but to pay; we cannot cease trading. Nor can we exclude the public: the Ecovillage is as open to the public as any housing estate. Even we abandoned our educational activities, we'd still need PL cover. And we've never had a claim, in ten years of operation. NB: we have to pass on this charge in full to Residents, so it's a tax on private citizens - at about €160 each per year.	6/26/2019 8:58 PM

602	The rising cost have so far not had a huge impact on us but we have had to pass on some of this cost to our users. The extra money spent on insurance could also obviously have been spent on other important areas	6/26/2019 3:21 PM
